Piezoelectric sensors produce Lamb waves that can be used to identify damages at a lower cost in the increasingly common carbon fiber composites. Sensor impact is increasing for airplane wings, and methods could reduce the cost of damage detection. Structural Health Monitoring in the aerospace industry is worth over $9 billion. Piezoelectric sensors in combination with the PCA method could reduce the cost of damage detection by 50%.